I still have most of my negatives (and digital files) from the past forty years. I attended Queensland College of Art in the 1970s, and majored in graphic design, photography, cinematography and animation. My working life began in government, where I established and ran a video production and community education unit, then moved into people management in other government departments. Along the way, I also collected a Bachelor of Arts majoring in Psychology and Communications, and a Masters of Public Health.

My serious involvement in photography increased when I retired. I joined the Keppel Coast Camera Club at Yeppoon four or five years ago, and found myself helping others to learn photography. Last year, I joined the Rockhampton Photography Club too, because they have more to teach me. I am webmaster for the KCCC, and for the Photographic Society of Queensland.

I've joined the Photographic Society of America, and the Photographic Society of Australia to learn more about making and post processing of images. I'm finding that the more I learn, the more I need to learn. It's a never ending process.

My photographic interests are wide. They include scapes, people, fauna, flora, you name it. Now I'm moving into the creative use of Photoshop to explore photography as 'art'.
